Using Reports to Drive Achievement

After a report cycle, reports will be issued to students and parents to complete reflections and identify areas of success and areas for improvement.

Teachers will analyse class data, identifying areas of knowledge that are vulnerable and require reteach, as well as student-level data to identify where intervention may be required to close gaps or address misconceptions.

Middle leaders will analyse subject data, identifying areas of curriculum implementation that are strong, and where refinement or intervention is needed to ensure that departmental targets are met.

Leaders will analyse school, cohort performance and identify any support required to ensure that whole school priorities are met.

“As long as you always see the next step, you can walk the whole way.”
